MIDDLESEX FARMERS

WONDERING ABOUT TIES Large Quantity of Ties Waiting for Railroad to Take.

A Middletown correspondent writes: Several hundred farmers in Middle-sex county who spent their spare time last winter in cutting ties for the ralilast winter in cutting ties for the raliroad company, are beginning to wonder if the company is to buy the ties which they have left at various stations along the Valley railroad. Estimates as to the number of ties cut and delivered at the stations vary, but some have placed it at 50,000 at the various places between Middletown and Saybrook Junction. Every station has some, but probably the largest number is at Higganum. There the station is practically surrounded by ties piled ten or twenty deep, while the oill to the south of the station is lined with huge piles. Deep River has a large quantity on hand also, and Generally the railroad company comes and gets the ties some time during the spring or early summer, but this year no steps have been taken to remove the ties. Many farmers put in several months during the winter clearing off their woodlots and hauling in ties with the expectation of getting a good bit of money for their work. The ties are not paid f'r when left there at the owner's risk, and the consequence is that many of the farmers throughout the country are hard pressed for money these days, as the income they had been counting on from the sale of the ties has not materialized. Whether or not the company will remove the ties this month, or wait now until next spring, is not known, but unless they do, there is liable to be a strong protest from the farmers. The ties taken now will probably not be used until next spring in most instances, and this will mean that next spring there will not be such a demand for new ties. This means then that the farmers will in many cases have to depend on some thing else this winter for an occupa
